Horse Equipments.

And the General public invited to see as he has come upon him, he made as though he would have produced the General in the

with his boy's forefinger, but suddenly drew back. The General looked worried, but returned to the charge with patient good nature.

"I don't want to make any blundering work at the start," he said, "because"

"No, no, no," interrupted the old man, earnestly; "no blundering this time; you're right there; it's all right, never was bungled up there; a bungler as big as a man wouldn't start it; oh, yes, you're right there; no blundering this time."

And the General fairly started, for as he listened, he thought he heard the old man whisper, under his breath, as a sort of appendix, "Not a darned bungler." He set his teeth hard, and looked in the old man's half-closed eyes.

"Mr. Tilden," he said, "I will be frank and open with you."

"Open?" said the old man, with an interrogation point in his face. "Oh, no, no. Hooped up. Didn't you say hoop her up, and didn't

I tell you yet, it was hooped up? And hooped up, oh, no, not open. No, not open. Yes, a 44 open. Oh, no!" he added with grave and earnest deliberation.

And then he looked at the General as though he didn't exactly understand him. The cold perception stood out on the General's brow in hooped drops.

"Mr. Tilden," he said earnestly, "listen to me. You cannot, you must not, misapprehend me. Do not stop me; hear me through. You cannot stare off—"

"No," the old man said with startling promptness and discouraging energy. "No, that's so. The right thing again. Not a stare off. Tight as a drum." And he repeated with comfortable emotion, "Tight as a drum, tight as a drum. Not a hoop loose, or a stare off."

The General turned inwardly in his chair, and barely repressed a groan. As it was, he alighted, and with an appealing glance into the old man's eyes, he said:

"This increases my fears and doubles my responsibilities. This adds—"

"What after?" asked the old man quickly, and with a suspicious glance at the General's

PARAGRAPHS OF INTEREST.

THE BLACKBIRD.

Upon the cherry-bough the blackbird sings
His carol, happy song.
As 'mid the rustled fruit he tilts his wings, Heedless of Right or Wrong.

No Future taunts him with his fears or hopes,
No cares his Present fret:
The Past for him no dismal vista opens
Of useless, dark regret.

Ah! how I envy him, as there he sings
His glad unthinking strain.
Untroubled by the end imaginings
That haunt man's pining brain!

All orchards are his home; no work or care Compels him here to stay;
His is the world—the breathing, open air—
The glorious Summer day.

Below, Earth blossoms for him; and above Heaven smiles in boundless blue;
Joy is in all things, and the song of Love Thrills his whole being through.

From bough to bough his gay and transient guest
Is free to come and go Where'er the whim invites, where'er the best Of July blackhearts grow.

His are these sunny sides, that through and through
He stabs with his black bill:
And his the happiness man never knew,
That comes without our will.

Ah! for an hour at least, when bold and free
In being's pure delight, Loosed from the cares that clog humanity,
The soul might wing its flight.

Then, blackbird, we might sing the perfect song
Of Life and Love with thee,
Where no secret now toll, nor fear of Wrong, Nor doubt of Right should be.

What know we of that rare felicity
The untroubled blackbird knows,
That no musing spoils; that frank and free
From merely living grows?

Hazards Repentance ever dogs our path;
The soul find Discontent Harries the spirit, and the joys it hath Are but a moment lent.

The riddle of our Life we cannot guess:
From toil to toil we waste,
And in our sweetest joy some bitterness
Of secret pain we taste.

Ah! for an hour at
